tl;dr: We realized you can use the Notion developer API to build a C2 platform. We wrote a cross-platform agent in Rust. It runs on Linux and Windows. All C2 comms traverse the Notion developer API. It's not a world-class C2 but does have a lot of post-exploitation capabilities. We think it's pretty cool! The code repo is here, the documentation is here. We hope you like it!

This was the spark of inspiration that caused us to ask:

- If you can programmatically read from and write to a Notion page using the Notion API in a completely legitimate fashion...

implement, having drawn inspiration from other C2s we love like Cobalt Strike and Empire, we'd try to remind ourselves that we were still in the Stone Age of this project's development. We settled on a core set of features for the evolution into the Iron Age. Someday we'll hit the Space Age and send a rocket ship to Alpha Centauri to achieve the Space Race victory condition.

Design Philosophy

We drew up plans for what MUST, SHOULD, and COULD be implemented in Iron Age. This included the absolute necessities (ability to run commands,

In short, this is a LOTS (living off trusted sites) goldmine and makes for incredibly sneaky C2 capacities.

Closing Thoughts

Adam Savage once said “Every Tool’s A Hammer.” We here at HuskyTaggart Works, LLC*, like to believe “Every Tool’s A C2.” All it takes is a little creativity and some elbow grease!
